FOCUS ON USAID

20 / ANDREW NATSIOS: GETTING USAID ON ITS FEET

Administrator Andrew S. Natsios is rebuilding USAID from the dark days when absorption into State was likely. But there is still much more to be done.

By Ben Barber

28 / AMERICA'S DEVELOPMENT CHALLENGE

President Bush's New Compact for Development Today is the first major new foreign assistance initiative in over 40 years. USAID Administrator Andrew Natsios explains how it is intended to work.

By Andrew S. Natsios

32 / FOREIGN AID: HELP OR HINDRANCE?

Foreign aid has failed, despite the best efforts of many dedicated professionals at USAID, the State Department and elsewhere.

By Doug Bandow

37 / THE GHOSTS OF LUENA

Two brushes with death in Angola, seven years apart, have reinforced for one FSO the importance of the work USAID and similar organizations do.

By Jeffrey Ashley

42 / DÉJÀ VU ALL OVER AGAIN?

USAID keeps trying, but it still hasn't found a magic formula for development that works worldwide. Yet it has done a lot of good.

By Joseph C. Guardianio

47 / CONTROLLING CONFLICT IN CENTRAL ASIA

Peace and stability are fragile and yet essential to anchor a process of sustainable development in Central Asia. So, for USAID, building civil society is a priority.

By Barbara Junisbai

COMBATING THREATS OF EMERGING DISEASES / 51

Experience in Latin America shows that, in terms of both technical effectiveness and sustainability, strengthening regional activities at the mission level may be the best use of USAID resources.

By Dr. Charles W. Oliver and Dr. Jaime Chang Neyra

MAINSTREAMING TRADE AT USAID:

THE CASE OF EGYPT / 54

USAID/Egypt has led the way in linking trade to development, creating models other missions can use.

By Dr. J. W. Wright, Jr.

FEATURES

KEEPING SCORE IN THE CONGRESSIONAL GAME / 60

AFSA rates senators and representatives on how well they supported American engagement in world affairs.

By Ken Nakamura

DIPLOMATIC CATHEDRAL-BUILDING / 71

American-imposed solutions to international problems will provide only illusory benefits unless the nations affected come to share democratic visions and values.

By James E. Goodby
